Court Beauties at Karague.
It was Speke who in his "Journal of the Discovery of the Nile" introduced us to the fattened wives of the kings and princes of Karague. He had been teld that the Court beauties attained such "lovely" proportions that they could not stand upright. He was enabled to verify the story on a visit to Warereru, the king's eldest brother. In the Royal hut he found the prince sitting with his chief wife "partitioned off on a bench strewn with grass, and with numerous bowls of a "pleasing beauty" of countenance, but "immoderately fat." She could not rise to her feet, and the fiesh hung in lumps from her unwieldy arms. "It is all the product of those pots," said Wasereru; "from early youth upwards we keep them to their mouths, as it is the fashion at Court to have very fat wives. "This book the "said Waserera! "from early that he was the fashion at Court always as it is the fashion at Court always was the forerunner of the sale." While book of key was the forerunner of the sale. A partial revival of trade in 1895 has made little or no difference in the figures just quoted, and the prospects for the future are most discouraging. The imposition of Protective duties in 1879 led to a vast improvement of the German output and consumption. Other impelling forces have helped our great competitor, such as new discoveries of ores, reduced railway rates, the development of English inventions, and new methods of their own, and new methods of their own. In 1886 they made 3.529.000 tons of pigiron, and by a steady annual increase the law ein a similarly regular.

The directors of the venerable Philharmonic lociety have arranged to produce several sew works during the eighty-fourth season, thich commences at the Queen's Hall on hursday. Feb. 27. Among these are a new cotch Fantasia for pianoforte and rehestra, writtin by Sir Alexander Mackenic, a Ballet Suite expressly composed for he society by Mr. Frederic Cowen, a Violin oncerto by the late Benjamin Goddard, and amo new orchestral works by Antonia

The klippspringer is one of the smaller yet most agile of the antelope tribe ill formerly was very abundant in South Africa, but on account of the advance of civilisation in that country it is becoming very scarce. Its hannts are in the most incoming the second of the same of civilisation in that country it is becoming the very scarce. The cast of "The Shopwalker" at the Yauderille promises well. The rentrée of Miss May Palfrey will be heartily welcomed, and Miss M. A. Victor is certain to be congratulated on her re-appearance after her recent illness. I am giad, too, to see in the list of the cast the name of Miss Nina Boucicault, a comedienne of more than common individuality, who has not been seen in a West-end piece since the withdrawal of stations to which the railway privilege extends, and anglers might do worse than try their luck in the neighbourhood. I believe the society's headquarters are at the Station at Tempsford by Mr. George Faulkner, a local angler. It was 39in, in length by 20in, in girth, and scaled 19th.

Some years back experiment was made, but only in a small and crade way, as to the possibility of conyerting orange peel into fuel. When thoroughly dried, it not only burns, but burns fercely, giving out great heat and next to no smoke. The well-intended of far fewer accidents consequent upon the strewing of the slippery peel in the streets. At Liverpool the other day an unfortunate woman owed her death to that cause, while here-fatal injuries are as common as black-beries. Would it be possible, I wonder, to work up the peel with tar and then subject it to compression, as in the manufacture of briquettes from coal dust? As for cautioning the public against throwing it about in the streets, you might as advantageously suggest to the Kaiser that people with bees in their bonnets should be locked up.

This season gives promise of a decided advance in the smartness of golf costumes. The clumsy-looking golf cape of coarse tweed appears to be somewhat falling out of favour, an uncommonly stylish little coat taking its place. One of these new coats looked remarkably well over a golf skirt of dark blue serge. It was of scarlet habit cloth, a short, easy-fitting shape, double-breasted. The deep turn-down collar and cuffs were of black velvet.

VERDICT OF MANSLAUGHTER.

Mr. Drew held an inquest at Kensington en Tuesday respecting the death of Elizabeth A. Biles, single woman, who was found with her throat cut outside a house in 331. A man named Cripps, a ship's fireman, stands remanded on a charge of having murdered the deceased. Accused was present in court in charge of two warders from Holloway Gaol.

—Amy Godwing, deputy of the house, said it was let out in tenements. Deceased lived in one set of rooms with a man when say the witness heard a noise, and found that deceased and another woman were quarrielling. Witness pacified them, and then remote to bed. Later on the witness heard a great on noise, as if crockery was falling. So and went to see what was the matter. On going to the room where deceased was witness aw a policeman tracing blood at the botton of the stairs, and took him to the deceased woman's room. She there found a pool of holod. All the furniture was in great confusion, and a baby was lying on the floor. No one else was in the room.

—Jane Madigan said that she lived on the first floor. On the Friday morning she heard a challenge of the sain of the conduct.—Charles Garnard, another lodger in the house, said that he heard deceased having a row with accused about a shilling. Deceased was a very violent woman and frequently abused accused. Accused to quarrel with Cripps about locking the door.

John Willoughby, a labourer, said that early on the Friday morning he heard a creaty on the Friday morning he heard to rearrel with Cripps about locking the door.

THE SESSION AND THE

Next Tuesday the Parliamentary Session opens, and the prolonged truce between the two political parties which has followed the opens, and the prolonged truce between the two political parties which has followed the great victory of the general election will come to an end. During the past six months there has been time enough to spare to both sides to take stock of the situation, and to elaborate their respective policies. Without pretending to foreshadow the terms of the Speech from the Throne, we may safely assume that there are two questions which the Government will place in the very forefront of their programme, and which will, so long as they are not satisfactorily disposed of, stop the way to the effectual consideration of any others. These are the question of adequate provision for the National Defence, and that of affording relief to the Woluntary Schools from the unfair pressure of competition by which they are being slowly crushed out of existence, in defiance of the spirit of the settlement arrived at in 1870. With regard to the first of these questions recent events have revealed a world-wide spirit of hostility to this country which has caused the whole nation, without distinction of party, to recognise the imperative necessity of placing the national defences, both by sea and land, on such a footing that other nations must admit that England can afford to maintain the position of proud isolation in which she now finds herself, because she is prepared to give a good account of every possible combination of foes that can threaten her. That penditure thereupon, was the stock Radical instrument for frightening Ministries. Parliaments, and the country into a perpetual policy of niggardliness. But we all know better than that nowadays. Only a few fatuous persons yet remain who are foolish enough to think that our Imperial grandeur, and even our national existence, can be guaranteed as secure if we refuse to pay the necessary price of national insurance. Ministers need fear nothing from the Opposition when they produce their scheme for the perfecting of the country's defences.

Foreign affairs may, very possibly, afford "our friends, the enemy" a better chance of effective attack. Those which concern the Transvaal and the Chartered Company, however, will not. Men of all parties have confessed to the consummate ability displayed by Mr. Chamberlain in the conduct of affairs of peculiar delicacy, difficulty, and consequent danger to peace. There will be but little disposition to embarrass the Colonial Secretary, except it be on the part of Mr. Labouchere—a politician whose eccentricities are habitually more injurious to his own side than to the objects of his attack. Still less room is there for carping criticism with regard to the relations of this country with Germany. Public opinion has so strikingly endorsed the conduct of the Government in replying to the insolence of the German Emperor by a display of naval force, which is the soundest of possible arguments in the circumstances, that the leaders of the Opposition would be ill-advised in the extreme if they were to set themselves against the torrent of public patriotism by cavilling at the Government on that score. There remain, however, the questions of Armenia and of Venezuela. On the latter archivation torrent of public patriotism by cavilling at the Government on that score. There remain, however, the questions of Armenia and of Venezuela. On the latter subject it is understood that Sir William Harcourt is prepared to come out very strongly indeed. He is said to be righteously indignant with Lord Salisbury for declining to submit the question of the boundary to arbitration at the imperious order of Mr. Cleveland. Sir William will say many things which he does not really mean for the sake of a temporary triumph in debate; but we doubt whether even he will venture to maintain that it is the duty of a British Government to knuckle under ignominiously to Yankee bluster. If he does, we can only say that he will not increase his popularity in the country. As to Armenia, the attack upon Lord Salisbury COMPANT'S"

In does, we can only say that he will not increase his popularity in the country. As to Armenia, the attack upon Lord Salisbury's predecessor at the Foreign Office can hardly, in common decency, blame his successor very much for persevering with the policy which he, Lord Rosebery, bequeathed to him. The fact is, that Lord Salisbury has done what honour and justice demanded of him. He has done all that could be done to save the victims of Turkish fanaticism, and of the political intrigues of their own leaders, so long as he Constantine Gisiousey, Frobisher-td. Horsey, sued Messrs. Demetrius Moschopolides and Leonidae Georges Evangelides, trading as the Stamboul Cigarette Co., and Educard de Franconi, manager to Zemphon Balli and Son, Great Winchester-st, for £6 %s. 6d. on a bill of exchange. The last-named sought protection under the Bankruptcy Act, and presented a list of creditors, which showed that not only the dobt sud for but £103 los. in addition, was due to the plaintiff for lent money, and £30 was owing to the London and Westminster Discount Co., which, however, was secured by a bill of sale executed only a few days before the plaintiff shill became due.—Plaintiff solicitor stated that defendant had an income of £10a year from a charge on some property, besides his income from business. Defendant had offered to pay £1 a month, but plaintiff saked for an order for 1s west.—Mr. Comr. Kerr said defendant unarge on some property, besides his income from a business. Defendant had offered to pay £1 a down his business. Defendant had offered to pay £1 a month, but plaintiff saked for an order for £1 a weak—Mr. Comr. Kerr said defendant seemed to be fortunate in getting financed, and sent the case to the High Court to compel defendant to set aside a part of his private income to pay the claims.

TOO MANY CHRISTMAS CARDS.

Messrs. Weolstone Bros. Chapel-st., sued Mr. H. Steel Parry, stationer, Llanelly, for £17 7s. for Christmas cards.—Defendant said the plaintiff sent him five times as many as he ordered, and he therefore sont the whole of them back, not retaining any. He also wrote before he received the goods cancelling the order alterswith.—On behalf of plaintiffs it

BURNT TO DEATH.
Mr. Drew held an inquest on the body of Jessie
Rogers, SS, widow, Bridge-st., Hammersmith—David Rogers said deceased was his mother, and resided with him. On Tuesday evening witness went to bed, leaving her in the kitchen. The glass lamp containing parafin oil stood on a high box sginst the wall. He was aroused by hearing screams, and saw the stairs in flames.
He jumped through them, and saw his mother in flames. These he extinguished with a shawl, and then put out the fire on the stairs. Deceased said she was not much hurt, but appeared frightened. The lamp was in pieces at the foot of the stairs.—James Hennessey, a coster, living in the house, said he was aroused by his brotherin-law calling him. He found the deceased had been burnt.—Dr. Knight, West London Hospital, said death took place on Wednesday from exhaustion following burns nearly all over the body.—Accidental death.

ASSAULT AT THE G.P.O.
John Freed, of the Bungalow, Loudwater, near Deaborough, Bucks, was aummoned for areaulting Mr. Maurice Manning by knocking him down on the steps of the G.P.O.
Letters were read which had been sent by defendant to the complainant—who is a clerk in the Post Office—ster the assault. These were of a threatening nature, alleging that he (Manning) had ill-treated his wife (defendant's daughter).—Having heard the cidence, Sir R. Hanson remarked that in one of his letters defendant admitted the assault. He remanded him to Holloway, in order that the dector might inquire into his mental condition.—On hearing this the defendant's daughter fainted, and had to be carried out of court.

O'er the turmoil of the street.
Only a common story,
One that we often hear;
Yet a heroic record,
Whose page is bright and clear.
The story of a woman—
Poor, and unlearned, and lone—
Whose way is on the path of toil,
Who many a care has known.
She lives alone, and her dwelling
Looks far o'er the house-tops black;
And she's known to the other lodgers
As "Little top-floor back."
She works away at her needle
From the birth to the death of day;
She is not what the world calls comely,
And her youth has passed away.
Of a heart that knows no guile;
And the dark of many a life she cheers
With the sunshine of her smile.
Hidden away in her attic
Are flowers that never fade—
Endurance, truth, and honour,
Which brightest bloom in shade.
While through her windows dreary
Shines over Faith's pure star.
What heroines in life's battle
Some lonely women are!
Once in the room beneath her
A genius—so they said—
Toiled away with his pen for fame,
Though wanting even bread.
A writer of plays and poems,
And her heart ached for the stranger
With the proud and weary eyes.
She gave him a cheery greeting
When'er she crossed his track.
And he grew to long for the sunny smile
Of "Little top-floor back."
She often longed to help him,
But work with her was short;
And she, with cold and hunger,
Many a battle-fought.
One night she heard him sobbing,
And her heart stood still with fear;;
For she guessed that he was starving,
And her heart stood still with fear;;
For she guessed that he was starving,
And her heart stood still with fear;;
For she guessed that he was starving,
And her heart stood still with fear;;
For she guessed that he was starving,
And her heart stood still with fear;;
For she guessed that he was starving,
And her heart stood still with fear;;
For she guessed that he was starving,
And her heart stood still with fear;;
For she guessed that he was starving,
And her heart stood still with fear;;
For she guessed that he was starving,
And want to both was near.
There in her empty cupboard
Lay one small loaf of bread;
All that she ha

God was still up on high:
And alone of His toiling children
He would not pass her by.
So it came to pass that the stranger,
Down in his lonely room,
Heard, as he thought, an angel
Speaking from out the gloom.
And it was a human angel
Who brought that loaf of bread,
And vanished away like a spirit,
'Ere his words of thanks were said.
She was only a little sempstress,
But her heart was good and true,
And she blushed at her deed of mercy,
As all good women do.
Yet it bore its fruit in season,
For work in plenty came,
And the stranger she had succoured
Leaped into sudden fame.
So he left the grim old dwelling,
But ere he went away
He held her hand fast clasped in his—
"I shall return some day.
Return to fetch the angel
Who a starving stranger fed.
For I never can forget you,
Never," he smiled and said.
So from the ken of the toilers
He passed, and time went on.
But in her trusting, woman's heart
The star of faith still shone.
But the weeks were months, and the months were years,
And he neither came nor sent;
And she knew that he'd forgotten,
On the world's applause intent.
